Episode Synopsis

Re-Imagined Radio pays tribute to three uniquely connected radio drama series that demonstrate high quality radio storytelling. These series were produced and broadcast by the same radio station from the 1930s-1950s, using a handful of voice actors and announcers that cycled between programs.

These three series are The Lone Ranger, The Green Hornet, and The Challenge of the Yukon. We sample from "Horse Thieves Steal Silver," the February 2, 1938 episode of The Lone Ranger, "Words and Music," the May 30, 1939 episode of The Green Hornet, and "Meeting the Terms of a Contract," the May 28, 1943 episode of The Challenge of the Yukon.

Thank you Jack . . . hello everyone . . . and welcome to Re-Imagined Radio.

This episode of Re-Imagined Radio, "Lone-Green-Challenge," pays tribute to three uniquely connected radio programs that demonstrate high quality radio storytelling.

Each was produced and broadcast by radio station WXYZ, Detroit, Michigan.

Each used a handful of voice actors and announcers that cycled between programs starring as wholesome, honest, larger than life characters.

Each was packaged with operatic overtures.

Each was intended for young audiences, but gained an adult following and today is among the best Old Time Radio programs.

What are these radio programs? Our episode title is a big hint. And here is another . . .

HOST

No doubt you recognize The Lone Ranger from its theme music, "The William Tell Overture." This music was written by Gioachino Rossini as the overture for his 1829 opera William Tell. George W. Trendle, owner of WXYZ radio, felt that young listeners would benefit from exposure to classical music and so adopted The William Tell Overture as the musical theme for his new radio program, The Lone Ranger. From 1933 to 1955, radio listeners enjoyed 2,956 episodes of The Lone Ranger. Let's listen now to "Horse Thieves Steal Silver," first broadcast February 2, 1938, and the earliest known surviving episode of The Lone Ranger . . .

After successfully establishing The Lone Ranger series, WXYZ radio began producing and broadcasting The Green Hornet. The series ran from 1938 to 1952. Like The Lone Ranger, The Green Hornet began with an operatic overture, in this case "The Flight of the Bumblebee" composed 1899-1900 by Nikolai Rimsky-Korsakov for his opera The Tale of Tzar Saltan. Let's listen to "Words and Music," the May 30, 1939 episode of The Green Hornet. . .

HOST

(Returning from Break)

With this episode of Re-Imagined Radio we pay tribute to three radio programs: The Lone Ranger, The Green Hornet, and The Challenge of the Yukon. Each was produced and broadcast by WXYZ radio in Detroit, Michigan, between the 1930s and the 1950s.)

The Lone Ranger was the first and was intended originally for younger audiences. But the adventures of The Masked Man, Tonto, and their two magnificent horses soon attracted a following of adult listeners.

The success of The Lone Ranger led to a new adventure series, The Green Hornet which copied much of its format and framework from the earlier series.

The Lone Ranger and The Green Hornet also shared family connections. Breitt Reid, young newspaper publisher and secretly The Green Hornet, is The Lone Ranger's great-nephew.

Recall The Lone Ranger origin story . . . Captain Dan Reid, his younger brother, John, and other Texas Rangers, were ambushed at Bryant Gap by the Butch Cavendish Gang. Dan and John, when not on duty with the Rangers, shared a secret and very rich silver mine. Mortally wounded in the ambush, Dan Reid extracted a promise from John: that if he survived he would work the silver mine and share its riches with Dan's wife and young son, Dan Reid, Junior.

John Reid survived with the help of Tonto. As The Lone Ranger, John Reid cared for his nephew Dan, as he promised. Dan's son, Breitt Reid, became The Green Hornet.

In addition to family, there are other connections. Both The Lone Ranger and The Green Hornet wore masks. Both used non-lethal means for dealing with the villains. But where The Lone Ranger had the magnificent horse Silver, The Green Hornet had Black Beauty, the fastest car in the world.

The Challenge of the Yukon carried these components forward with Sergeant Preston dispatching claim jumpers, crooks, and bushwhackers with the help of his black horse Rex and Yukon King, "the swiftest and strongest lead dog in the Northwest." In fact, the program was also known as Yukon King because the dog figured so prominently in many plots.

Produced by George Trendle, owner of WXYZ radio, and written by Fran Striker, The Lone Ranger, The Green Hornet, and The Challenge of the Yukon are examples of pioneering radio storytelling.

Through voices, music, and sound effects we are there as the The Lone Ranger, The Green Hornet, and Sergeant Preston keep the criminals in check. They each stand for something, and never back away from their guiding principles.

The larger than life characters, the adventurous plots, even the classical music themes have all contributed to making The Lone Ranger, The Green Hornet, and The Challenge of the Yukon among the best of all Old Time Radio programs.
